BRACE FOR 'ALL OUT' JAP THRUST

MERCURY SKIDS TO NINE BELOW, COLD TO STAY

Mansfield Has Coldest Night In 2 Years; Ohio Has Some 20 Below Readings.

MODERATES TONIGHT

But Weatherman Says Frigid Blasts Will Last at Least For Another Day.

Mansfield had its coldest weather in two years this morning as the mercury registered an official nine below zero and fell to as low as 12 below in Bellville and other sections of the county. It was the coldest Jan. 8 in Ohio's history as the mercury registered 20 below in some communities.

The intense cold settled over the city and all of Ohio to give the city area the fourth consecutive day of below-zero readings. Yesterday was one of the city's coldest days in recent years with an average reading of two below zero. The highest for the day was five above. Normal for the date is 30.5 degrees.

The weatherman said the temperature probably will moderate slightly tonight, but the cold wave will retain its grasp on the state for at least another day, it was predicted. The sun warmed the mercury up to four above zero at noon today.

Today was the city's coldest day since Jan. 9, 1940, when the cold set a 17-year record at 15 below zero. Fourteen days in January that year had below-zero readings.

The biting cold was held responsible for at least two fires and a traffic accident in the city area last night and early today.

An overheated stove in a poultry house early today caused a fire which destroyed 100 chickens and the poultry house at the Peter Soron home, 106 Lewis avenue, firemen said.

Firemen extinguished a fire this morning in a taxicab at Third and Walnut street when a hose on the radiator burst and sprayed alcohol over the engine which quickly burst into flames.

URGES CONTROL

Senators Would Place Wires Under FDR Supervision.

WASHINGTON —(INS)— Declaring that the president must have control of communication facilities in time of war, the senate interstate commerce committee today filed a report recommending passage of a house-approved bill permitting the president to take over wire communications.

The committee, however, told the senate that the bill "does not contemplate system of permanent control or operation of communication facilities."

"No general control of communication in the United States is intended or planned either by the committee or by those agencies of government directly effected," the report stated.

EIGHT LOST ON MINE PLANTER

12 Rescued as Craft Sinks in East Coast Gale.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H.—(U.P.)— Eight civilians were reported lost and a dozen or more rescued when the junior mine planter Arnold sank suddenly in a gale early today while being towed to Portsmouth.

The army, in disclosing the accident, said the mine planter Baird, which had the Arnold and another disabled mine planter in tow, would arrive here late this afternoon with the survivors.

The Arnold, a 98-foot craft, went down in heavy seas.

Congress Ready to Study 5 Per Cent U. S. Sales Tax

Federal---

Plan Urged to Swell Revenue In Next Year

Interest Grows In Proposal as Means to Raise Part of 9 Billion In New Income for War Effort.

(By United Press)

WASHINGTON—Congress appeared today to be in a mood to give careful consideration to a general sales tax as a means of increasing the federal government's revenue this year by $9,000,000,000.

One congressional leader believed that such an increase—bringing total tax collections to $27,000,000,000—was an impossibility without a sales tax. Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D., N. C.) of the house ways and means committee and other committee members have shown increasing interest in sales tax proposals.

If a sales tax is proposed and defeated, that doesn't mean the bill of the average taxpayer won't be increased in 1942. It definitely will be increased, but the method to be used in boosting the revenue remains to be determined by congress—and most congressmen today were as confused by the colossal figures of the new budget as the man in the street.

One thing is certain. This year's income tax on 1941 income, the largest ever which is due March 15, will not be increased further.

President Roosevelt, a consistent opponent of sales tax legislation in the past, said in his budget message to congress yesterday:

"All through the years of the depression I opposed general excise and sales taxes and I am as convinced as ever that they have no permanent place in the federal tax system. In the face of the present financial and economic situation, however, we may later be compelled to reconsider the temporary necessity of such measures."

Congressmen noted that Mr. Roosevelt said "later," but they believed he might approve a sales tax program as a "temporary necessity."

Two features of the tax program Mr. Roosevelt discussed were not as well received as the sales tax hint. They were:

An indirect endorsement—as interpreted by congressional quarters—of the sliding scale income withholding tax, where the taxpayer pays-as-he-goes but never knows more than a month in advance what his tax will be.

Revision of the excess profits tax, the big issue of the 1941 tax program.

The sliding scale income withholding tax was drafted by a group of college and university economists headed by Albert G. Hart, associate professor of economics at Iowa State university.

Under that proposal, congress would enact a bill providing that taxes on $1,000 net income, for example, may range from 10 to 20 per cent, the final figure to be determined by the treasury and collected weekly, monthly or quarterly from the employer after the deduction of personal exemptions. Self-employed would compute and pay their own taxes.

'Go Home and Save,' Bricker Tells Mayor Seeking Funds

(By Associated Press)

COLUMBUS—Ohio's local government officials began to suspect that they won't get any of the state government's $13,252,996 surplus.

Gov. John W. Bricker told them "no" yesterday for at least the sixth time.

This time he was almost curt.

"Go home and cut expenditures to the bone," the governor told a delegation headed by Mayors Frank J. Lausche of Cleveland and Floyd F. Green of Columbus. "Cut out all salary increases and do everything to win this war."

The delegation hardly had an opportunity to explain why it thought a special session of the legislature should be called to give financial assistance to municipalities needing additional revenue.

Mayor Lausche, ready to elaborate on a letter he wrote weeks ago, was informed that the governor did not desire to hear further from him unless he had new suggestions.

Then Governor Bricker explained why the state would not part with any of the surplus:

He said the money must be retained to protect the state against a decline in its own revenues; a decline which he estimated might total $30,000,000 this year if the war continued to curtail consumer purchases on which the state collects taxes.

"We are facing a situation," the local officials were told, "that would make it almost perilous to cut into the state surplus."

The governor declared there would be no special session of the legislature except at request of the federal government to aid prosecution of the war.

Replying to arguments that local government revenues have declined, the governor produced statistics which showed, he said, that local revenues for 1941 exceeded those of 1939 by $15,000,000.

He also said the department of taxation reported that local revenues from real estate taxes under the 10 mill limitation equalled those under the old 15 mill limit.

Some city officials have blamed the reduction in the real estate tax limit for their financial predicament.

Cuts City Appropriations $51,613 Under '41 Expenditures

Mansfield's city government will have to get along on $304,353 in its general fund this year, $51,613 less than it actually received for operation costs in 1941, city council's finance committee decided last night in slashing $37,500 from the city departments' appropriation requests for the new year.

The council committee's action in reducing the operating appropriation to one of the lowest figures in recent years was in line with Gov. John W. Bricker's advice to Ohio cities to "tighten up your belts and cut expenses to the bone."

The governor issued his statement yesterday to a delegation of Ohio mayors who went to Columbus to request a share of the state's sales tax surplus, said to amount to $13,252,996. The governor refused to call a special session of the legislature to split the tax surplus, as requested by the mayors.

Attending the meeting were members of council's new finance committee, Democratic Councilmen Fred Miller and Michael Mi-

PEACE GESTURE?

U. S. Hears Soviets and Finns Seeking War Settlement.

WASHINGTON — (U.P.) — Informed sources here believed today that diplomatic overtures were under way between Finland and Soviet Russia looking to a peaceful settlement of their present conflict but they declined to speculate on the outcome.

These sources said that such overtures probably were being undertaken through Sweden and that the United States has not been approached. Sweden has diplomatic relations with Finland, Russia and Great Britain.

Observers believed it probable that some assurance would be given to Finland regarding territorial integrity after the conflict by some or perhaps all of the 26 nations allied against the Axis powers.

SEES DECREASE IN RELIEF BILL

Director Estimates Drop to Total $7,000,000.

COLUMBUS—(U.P.)—State Welfare Director Charles L. Sherwood estimated today that Ohio's 1941 relief bill, reduced by increased employment and war-time spending, would total $17,000,000—a decrease of approximately $7,000,000 from the $24,399,650 spent in 1940.

On the basis of reports from 105 of the state's 153 local relief areas, Sherwood said that the state's December relief bill would be approximately $1,300,000 or $680,000 under December 1940.

$2,649 TO GO IN WAR FUND DRIVE

Richland Red Cross Reports $27,352 Raised Toward Goal of $30,000.

Richland county chapter of the Red Cross saw its $30,000 war emergency fund quota shoot toward the top today as industrial and other contributions since yesterday raised the total to $27,352, or $2,648 short of the goal.

Confident that the quota will be reached, if not exceeded, by Saturday, W. J. Spreng, chairman of the campaign committee, urged campaign captains and workers to "go after over-subscription," in response to an appeal from national headquarters that the drive be continued until "the entire citizenship has been given opportunity to participate."

"Funds are urgently needed to keep intact front lines of mercy where Red Cross workers are giving service needed," the wire said, adding that the "war fund should be pushed to rapid over-subscription."

Contributions yesterday amounting to $2,458.60, included gifts of $500 and over from the employes of both Westinghouse and Mansfield Tire and Rubber company. The Westinghouse employes' donation of $565 raises the employes' gift from that industry to approximately $2,500 and collections are still incomplete. Donations of Westinghouse will be matched dollar for dollar by the industry itself up to the aggregate of $3,000.

Mansfield Tire and Rubber company employes added another $500 to a previous donation of $517 and indicated that additional contributions are still to come.

Gifts from other local concerns included $200 from the Mansfield Telephone company; $165, Ohio Public Service company, and $112, Ohio Fuel Gas company.

Austrian Skiing Stars Held By Federal Agents

SALT LAKE CITY —(U.P.)— The wartime alien roundup has swept at least three Austrian skiing stars—two of them married to American heiresses—from America's winter playgrounds into internment.

Weeks after rumors began circulating in the mountain region that prominent German and Austrian skiers had been taken into custody, the federal bureau of investigation at Washington confirmed last night that three were being held. They were:

Frederick Friedl Pfeifer, director of the Sun Valley, Idaho, ski school and husband of the former Hoyt Smith, daughter of Fred Smith, prominent Salt Lake City banker.

Joseph Seep Froelick, husband of the former Natalie Rogers, member of a prominent New York banking family.

Hans Hauser, Pfeifer's predecessor at Sun Valley and more recently a member of his staff.

AID CIVILIAN DEFENSE FOR UNITY, APPEAL

Richland Defense Workers, Addressed By Metzenbaum, Warned of Complacency.

England Once Thought Cities Would Not Be Severely Bombed, Speaker Says.

By ALVIN L. KRIEG

"Even though no bombs ever drop on this land of ours—and pray God they never do—the civilian defense program in the United States will point the way to a national unity even greater than that which has existed since Pearl Harbor."

This was the ringing message left today with Richland county's civilian defense workers by James A. Metzenbaum of Cleveland, state senator and inspector-general of the national civilian defense organization.

More than 150 heard Metzenbaum speak last night at the Legion home. Present were county commissioners, township trustees, many ex-servicemen, school officials, leaders in Boy Scout and Y. M. C. A. work, and officers of municipalities throughout the county—mayors, civilian defense chairmen, fire chiefs and police chiefs.

Throughout his highly inspirational address, Metzenbaum stressed the importance of every phase of civilian defense. This work provides the answer, he said, to the question raised by every man, woman, and child —" what can I do ?"

Warning against complacency, he said that even as late as eight months after the outbreak of the war, England felt its cities would not be severely bombed. He then painted a dramatic, realistic picture of a city under aerial bombardment, and described the development of the intricate and highly-efficient civilian defense machinery in English cities.

"Every person should enroll in and become proficient in first aid," Metzenbaum declared, "The Red Cross needs instructors all over our land. And even the ordinary first aid is not enough—as Poland, France, Greece, and the low countries proved. To handle the indescribable wounds that are

Defenders Set For Final Big Luzon Attack

Nipponese Rush Up Reinforcements As U. S. Troops Out-Numbered By Four-to-One Exact Heavy Toll Of Invaders; M'Arthur In Field.

(By United Press)

WASHINGTON—Gen. Douglas MacArthur reported today that his forces stand ready to meet "with skill and courage" a final grand Japanese assault which appears about to be launched with the aid of strong enemy reinforcements.

MacArthur, coolly awaiting the massive Japanese blow which may fall at any time, reported that morale of his U. S. and Philippine forces is notched high.

He indicated plainly that he and his men are ready to fight to the last to hold off the attacking enemy.

Already they have exacted a fearful cost in casualties and war material upon the Japanese. A war department spokesman said today that American casualties, in contrast have been comparatively light.

This indicated that MacArthur, employing all the tactical skill for which he is famed, has marshalled his small troops virtually intact into their strong final positions in Batan province and Fortress Corregidor awaiting all-out Japanese attack.

The official communique today reported that the Japanese, who probably outnumber MacArthur's command at least four or five to one, are rushing heavy reinforcements up to the front "probably preparatory to a large-scale general attack."

As each side jockeyed for position preparatory to the decisive battle there was a momentary lull in the Japanese air attack of rocky Corregidor and the strong positions in which MacArthur has emplaced his troops on Batan peninsula.

The Japanese instead sent over reconnaissance planes, the communique revealed, apparently to determine the extent of damage inflicted upon the powerful gun positions and rock-protected positions of Corregidor.

But the communique made plain that the lull in the air was not accompanied by any cessation of ground pressure.

"Fighting of varying intensity" was reported along the Luzon land front, presumably consisting of punches by Japanese forces at MacArthur's short, tight defensive line in an attempt to locate weak spots at which the final assault may be directed.

Assistant Secretary of War John J. McCoy reported that the war department has had no complete report on casualties on either the American or Japanese side.

MacArthur, he indicated, has been too busy fighting to furnish the department with detailed bulletins on the progress of the battle. However, McCoy said that indications were that American casualties have not been "unduly heavy" and that Japan has lost

RETREAT: Germans Begin New Flight on Road to Tripoli

(By Associated Press)

Adolf Hitler's tattered North African armies have started a new retreat on the west-bound road to Tripoli, the British announced today, and British spearheads now are operating 600 miles from the starting-point of the drive into Libya.

A bulletin from British Middle East headquarters said the Axis forces, which failed to give battle at Agedabia, 90 miles south of Bengasi, were falling back under cover of a blinding sandstorm.

The communique said British mobile columns were in pursuit, slashing at the Axis flanks and rear.

(British sources in London said that the offensive into Libya was now 600 miles from its starting points along the Egyptian border.)

Penetrations of 20 to 40 miles into territory previously held by the enemy were reported south of Agedabia, some 300 airline miles within Libya near the innermost curve of the Gulf of Sirte.

The Axis forces had stood for days in the Agedabia region after a fighting retreat from the Bengasi region before finally choosing withdrawal as against further battle.

More good news came from the Soviet battlefront, with Russia's armies officially reported to have advanced within 40 miles of the Vyazma-Bryansk line on which the Germans had been expected to attempt to dig in for the winter.

Soviet dispatches said Russian troops had driven wedges more than half way through Nazi defenses on the central front, ranging as deep as four and one-half miles, including a system of cam-

EXPLAINS: Deputy Says That British Lacked Arms In East.

(By Associated Press)

LONDON—Major Clement R. Attlee, lord privy seal, speaking as Prime Minister Churchill's deputy, told the house of commons frankly today that Britain did not have sufficient resources for complete preparation against the Japanese who, he declared, at present have the most powerful fleet in the Pacific.

House members cheered, however, when he summed up accounts after the first month of war in the Pacific even though they were given little new information about the war effort.

News of further steps to coordinate manpower and munitions of the United Nations awaited the return of the prime minister from America.

In a broad summarization of the war Attlee told commons:

"The fact that the United States has entered the war on our side has determined the result of the war, but does not offset the advantages that accrue to Japan in the beginning. . . . "

He declared that even if Britain had increased her own production to the utmost she could not produce enough arms at present for the Far East to equal the strong military force of Japan.

Apparently in reply to criticism of the seeming inadequacy of British military preparations in the Far East, Attlee said the fact that Britain's Pacific positions were less strongly garrisoned and equipped than might have been wished was not due to lack of foresight.

Rather, he said, it was because it was beyond Britain's resources to be strong everywhere.

He said the visit of Prime Minister Churchill, Minister of Supply Lord Beaverbrook and high British staff officers to Washington had achieved a degree of cooperation with the United States which would not have been possible otherwise.

At the same time he made it clear that Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell's command, as chief of the Allied forces in the far western Pacific, would not include India and Australia.

GEN. JOHNSON:

By GEN. HUGH S. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON—For what it was intended — an inspirational appeal and an expression of dogged determination — the president's speech on the state of the union was excellent.

Gen. Johnson.

Most people expected a little more than that—some idea of our present military and naval situation, at least the general principles of our new world strategy and a little more progress in equipping our troops with modern arms.

The only thing said not clearly evident for some time had to do with a determination to send not only our navy and air force but also our army to fight anywhere in the world where the high command may decide they are needed.

The time to debate that decision has long passed. We have made the president clearly responsible for the conduct of our nation through war to victory. He should no more be limited in the exercise of our war powers where such a question as strategy is involved than should the commander of a field army in contact with the enemy.

It is hard to see why we should send army troops to Great Britain when there are so many other areas so scantily manned and armed and when the British are believed to have built up a stronger army than our own. But that, too, is not debatable. We must assume the utmost discretion in our commander-in-chief as long as he occupies that position.

Recitals of just how many planes, guns, ships and tanks we are going to produce within a given time are confusing and almost meaningless when read from a long list with only the most generalized description of types. Also boasts of what any man is "gonna" do are not half so convincing as statements of what he has already actually done. There has been too much tall talk and small performance in this war already.

Perhaps the president's recitation went as far into detail as it was wise to go. It was at least frank in acknowledging defeats and in not minimizing burdens and hardships yet to come.

These our people have been told about to repletion but have so far suffered little. They have not complained. On the programs laid down they are going to feel some of them very bitterly and that time is only a few weeks away.

Even then, I think they will not complain if they are shown why individual sacrifices hitting some, but not all, are necessary and if they are assured by careful explanations that their own needs have had every consideration and that there is no other way except for them to take the gaff.

This certainly has not been done. Such an instance as Ickes' headlong oil rationing suggests, on the contrary, that these things can be done with little study or consideration of this difficult problem of civilian supply.

Some publicists overlook this point entirely and even go so far as to say that these deprivations, though perhaps not necessary at the moment, help build up reserves on the one hand and tend to anger our people to a fighting pitch on the other—something like poking up a cage-full of wildcats with a pronged sharp stick.

It is not good strategy for public morale. If later on it is proved that some great dislocations were unnecessary, it will be very much worse for that morale and the unity on which it must be based. In the present mad rush to "get things started" nobody seems to be giving much thought to this very important angle of the war picture.

It is true that the "time is short," true that there is no time to lose. But let us hope that, in our haste to appropriate money and get "something on paper" in important contracts, we do not do a panicky, slip-shod production job that will waste more money, time and effort than it conserves and may lay the eggs for the worst kind of future troubles.

MANAGEMENT WINS ROUND IN AUTO TIFF

Secures Creation of Small Committee To Supervise Arms Output Changeover.

(By United Press)

WASHINGTON — Automobile manufacturers have won an initial victory in their dispute with labor over direction of that industry during the war, but labor is expected today to continue its efforts to obtain equal authority in converting motor plants to armament production.

The office of production management is the "umpire" in the labor-management wrangle which has threatened to delay the immediate all-out war production program.

The dispute has been going on for almost a week, but broke into the open last night after a joint labor-management supercommittee which was set up last Monday was scrapped and a new subcommittee to "assist" rather than direct conversion of the plants was announced by OPM.

Labor favored the supercommittee plan which would have given it an equal voice with management to "determine" policy and force execution of it in the industry's effort to produce war weapons. Management opposed it.

Management favors the new subcommittee, which apparently would have only advisory power. Labor opposes it.

Management bases its stand on the contention that it has done a good job on the production lines. Labor charges that the corporations have failed to convert their facilities to war work and threaten widespread unemployment among auto workers.

The new subcommittee—as yet unnamed by the OPM—probably will include three representatives of labor and three for management with a government chairman at the helm.

LEGISLATORS IGNORE OLD PARTY LINES

Ask Ohioan To Rally Support Against Farm Bloc Hobbling Attempt.

(By Associated Press)

WASHINGTON—Senate administration leaders ignored party lines today and called upon a Republican, Senator Taft (Ohio) to rally support against a farm bloc attempt to hobble the wartime price control measure.

Taft, who served in the food administration during the last war as an aide to former President Hoover, had cooperated with Democratic Leader Barkley (Ky.) and Senator Brown (D., Mich.) in drafting the price control bill in the senate banking committee.

Both said they expected Taft to aid them against the demands of the powerful, bi-partisan farm group that the secretary of agriculture be given a "veto power" over any farm prices fixed by the administration under the pending bill.

Senator Bankhead (D., Ala.), leader of the farm group, claimed he had 50 votes lined up for the amendment. This would be more than enough to overturn administration provisions that price-fixing powers be centered in a single administrator.

Both Brown and Barkley questioned Bankhead's claim but indicated they would delay any test of votes until Friday.

Administration leaders asked Taft's support even though he differs with them over administration of the wartime price controls. Taft asked that the far-reaching powers be entrusted to a board of five members, with the price administrator as chairman. Senator Brown said that President Roosevelt wanted a single administrator and most senators expected Leon Henderson, acting price administrator under executive orders, to get any new post created by the pending bill.

Taft told the senate yesterday that the bill was "very much broader" than price control attempts during the last war. He said that only food and fuel administrations exercised price-fixing authority then, while the pending bill authorized such action in almost all commodities and fields.

Brown, who spent nearly five hours explaining the measure to the senate yesterday, said afterward that price increases already had added $2,000,000,000 to defense outlays by the government and that they would add another $13,500,000,000 to to the $67,000,000,000 defense program approved by congress before the outbreak of war.

If the rate of price increases since outbreak of the European war continues, Brown said, it could increase war costs by $350,000,000,000 or more on the vast program now set down by President Roosevelt.

Majority Leader Barkley said he "hoped" to complete senate action on the price control measure by Friday but Senator Brown said passage might be delayed until Saturday. The senate bill then would go back to the house for action on numerous senate amendments to the weaker measure passed by the lower chamber Nov. 28, before the outbreak of war.

Kilgallen

He was, in short, a Big Shot, worthy of being done by Eddie Robinson or Humphrey Bogart. He differed from the usual pattern in one important respect, however. He was in love with his wife, and he was as faithful and attentive as any husband could be.

The wife, whom we shall call Renee, was a lovely showgirl from the Ziegfeld ranks. She had unlimited charge accounts, closets full of furs, boxes of jewelry, a magnificent home staffed with excellent servants and three automobiles. She had, as you can see, everything a showgirl could want.

But she wasn't satisfied.

She used to sit all alone in her castle and read Cholly Knickerbocker's column and the other society pages, and yearn for the day when her own name might be mentioned in the chronicles of blue blood activity.

And that was why, finally, she left Jim. She told him why; she was young and pretty and she was going to find herself a husband in the Social Register before it was too late.

She got a divorce, and being young and pretty and well-dressed and bejeweled, she soon found the man she wanted—a solid socialite whose name was often printed on the society pages, who always dined with the best people. Ronald, his name was, and Renee and Ronald were married, a few years ago.

But it wouldn't be telling the truth to say they were happy. They haven't spent a happy day since their honeymoon. Because Renee likes the pretty things of life, and Ronald is stingy, as stingy as Jim was generous. He gives her $50 a week for spending money and clothes, and not another nickel. She hates him.

She'd give anything to go back to Jim, but she can't. It's too late.

A year ago he married a girl who appreciates all the nice things he does for her. A girl in the Social Register.

But you can't print that. If it were known that her ex-husband was an ex-bootlegger, Renee might not be invited to those dull dinner parties any more. And they're all she's got.

STORM KILLS 28

Heavy Rains Crumble Buildings In Rio de Janeiro.

RIO DE JANEIRO—(U.P.)—Officials listed 28 persons killed and 36 injured today in the city's "worst storm in 40 years," with rescuers toiling through the wreckage of collapsed buildings in search of still other victims.

Heavy rains caused the structures to crumble and it was believed that a number of persons still were buried beneath debris.

FOUR A MINUTE!

That's Schedule of Plane Output Ordered By Roosevelt.

NEW YORK — (INS) — The nation's war production schedule, outlined by President Roosevelt, calls for building a plane every four minutes and a tank every seven minutes of the year 1943, the National Association of Manufacturers pointed out today.

FIRE DESTROYS NEW YORK PIER

FBI Hunts Sabotage Evidence as Fierce Blaze Damages 7,500-Ton Freighter.

NEW YORK — Fire burned municipally-owned pier 83 on the Hudson river to the water's edge today, and damaged the 7,516-ton freighter Lancaster.

Federal Bureau of Investigation agents were seeking evidence of sabotage.

It took firemen, using almost every piece of land equipment in Manhattan borough and three fireboats, two and a half hours in the bitter cold to bring the flames under control.

A high wind threatened for a while to sweeep them to adjoining piers.

The pier and its contents, authorities said, were a "total loss."

The Lancaster was unloading a cargo of copra (dried cocanut meat.) It caught fire, but tugs shoved it into the middle of the river and the flames were extinguished with slight damage.

Mayor Fiorello H. Laguardia sped to the pier after the fourth alarm to direct firemen. His right cheek was frost-bitten, and five department surgeons treated him and he soon left for home.

Four firemen were treated for burns and smoke inhalation.

It was the third disastrous waterfront fire in recent months. Last Aug. 18, the New York and Cuba mail line freighter Panuco burned at its pier on East river in Brooklyn. At least 33 men were killed.

Retakes Likely to Delay Wedding of Movie 'Boy King'

HOLLYWOOD —(INS)— Because retakes are necessary on the box office king's latest movie, the wedding of Mickey Rooney and Ava Gardner, reportedly scheduled to take place tomorrow in Santa Barbara, today was postponed for a few days.

The youthful film pair were trying hard to keep the date and place of their wedding secret because they want to avoid crowds, but it was generally believed that the ceremony will be performed either Saturday or Sunday.

Unless there is a last minute change of plans, Mickey and his bride will spend at least part of their honeymoon in Boston.

Rooney is due to appear there Jan. 22 at a war fund benefit and according to intimates of the star his bride almost certainly will accompany him.

Clevelander Killed After Asking Apology for Waitress.

CLEVELAND — (AP) — George Seman, 24, was shot to death early today after demanding that a man apologize for an insulting remark to a cafe waitress.

Three hours after the slaying, four men—three of whom police said appeared to have been in a fight—were arrested in a west side house. A pistol with one bullet discharged was found concealed in a coal scuttle. No charges were filed immediately.

HERE'S ANSWER

Give Old Razor Blades To Help Build Army Tanks.

CHICAGO —(INS)— Answer came today to the vexing question of what to do with old razor blades.

It was: "Tanks for Yanks—save your old razor blades."

Solution to the problem was furnished by the Master Barbers association of Chicago whose executive secretary-treasurer, Frank Aliotta, announced that every barbershop would be a receiving station.

He added that steps were being taken to make the campaign nationwide. More than 7,000,000 blades, he said, are sold every year and more than 5,000 tons of metal go into their manufacture annually.

None of the guests was injured but firemen had to rescue Clarence Dodd, a glass worker, from a third floor balcony to which he dropped when a rope made of bed clothing broke. Dodd was using the makeshift rope to descend from a fourth-floor room.

Firemen succeeded in confining the blaze to sections of the second and third floors.

MOTHER BURNED

Locked In Flaming Home, 4 Children Are Saved.

SIDNEY —(INS)— Four small children were left motherless today by a fire which destroyed the frame residence of Edward Purke and claimed the life of his wife, Mrs. Ruth Purke, 32.

The family was living in a remodeled garage at Montra, Shelby county, until they could make other arrangements. When an over-heated stove ignited the building, the Purkes and their four children, 2 to 14 years old, escaped but Mrs. Purke reentered the flaming building to get clothing for the children.

She was overcome and a spring lock prevented the husband from reaching her. Her body was found in the ruins of the building which burned to the ground. Purke is employed at a Sidney refrigerator plant.

Draft Boards Here Told of Stiffened Deferment Rules

Prospective soldiers can no longer obtain deferment by being married shortly before they are due to be inducted into the army, Richland county draft boards said today.

Under revised selective service laws, no registrant who has acquired a dependent since war was declared Dec. 8 will be deferred unless he can prove to his draft board that "such status was acquired under circumstances beyond his control."

Board clerks said registrants "certainly have some control over their marriage," although a death in the family might impose added financial burdens which may be considered by the boards in classifying registrants in the 3-A group.

Even before the laws were revised, Richland county boards sent a number of recently married selectees to camps when the boards were convinced that they married with the intention of acquiring a dependent.

SEEK PERMIT TO BUILD CONDUIT THROUGH CITY

Ohio Bell Officials To Put In New Long-Distance Cable Network.

City council permission to run a new underground conduit system through Mansfield as part of a $1,583,000 program calling for construction of a new long-distance cable network with [illegible]sfield has been requested by the Ohio Bell Telephone company.

Representatives of the telephone company asked council to pass ordinance which would permit the company to build the subterranean line, running through the city from east to west.

The proposed line would connect long-distance lines from Massillon, Findlay, Delaware, Wooster, Galion and Marion and would lead to the new Ohio Bell repeater station being constructed at 131-137 West Second street, they said.

Council gave the ordinances first readings and requested its street and utilities committees and the city solicitor to investigate the problem.

The proposed conduit system would enter the city from U. S. route 30-E, near the city's sewage disposal plant. Wires would be run beneath the sewage plant, Rocky Fork creek and the many railroad tracks and streets intervening, finally connecting with Mansfield Telephone company conduits which would lead the new cables into the repeater station on Second street.

The local telephone company's underground conduits would also be used to carry the cable connection out Second street to Sturges avenue to Park avenue west and finally to U. S. route 30-S where the Ohio Bell would continue its underground system towards Galion.

This special network is being built, according to the Ohio Bell company representatives, to handle the increased flow of long-distance telephoning because of defense needs.

The new Mansfield building will house both the repeater equipment and long-distance switchboards, and will replace the old long-distance office in the Bird building. The company will spend $166,000 in Mansfield alone in making connections for the new network. $65,000 going for the land and new building on Second street.

TROOPS BRACE FOR 'ALL OUT' JAP ONSLAUGHT

Luzon Defenders Ready For Final Thrust as Enemy Strengthens Army.

"considerably more" troops than has MacArthur.

MacArthur himself, McCoy said, is in the field at the side of his troops, directing their operations in person. He naturally declined to indicate whether MacArthur's headquarters were on the Batan penisula or deep within Corregidor, which probably will be the citadel of the final U. S. stand on the islands.

The tone of the American communique was in striking contrast to Japanese propaganda claims on the progress of the Philippine campaign. The Tokyo radio took the line that the task of the American forces was "hopeless" and that they were being driven from position after position.

MacArthur, however, reported that "the morale and determination of the American and Philippine troops are high and that they may be counted on to continue their resistance with skill and courage."

It was apparent that MacArthur and his men were selling their lives as dearly as any American fighting men since the Alamo.

But it was a race against time—time for American planes to be flown east to battle stations in Burma, the Dutch East Indies and Australia. Time for American naval forces to reconcentrate in the southwest Pacific. Time for the British to catch a second wind in the defense of vital Singapore.

From British, Dutch, Australian and Chinese sources came indications of U. S. air and sea reinforcements flowing toward the battle area

London understood that the small naval forces at the disposal of U. S. Admiral Thomas C. Hart shortly will be reinforced and Batavia reported Dutch confidence that the Netherlands East Indies can maintain their fighting front until American air aid reaches the Dutch island bases.

The Dutch breather assurance that they had available ample man power to operate as many tanks as American ships can rush to those far off positions. From Canberra came word that the Dutch, in conference with the Australians, are declaring for tactics and strategy which will call for establishment of a firm Allied line beyond which no Japanese can penetrate.

Axis propagandists busied themselves in circulating a detailed yarn concerning a big "naval battle" which they alleged occurred some 600 miles west of Davao. In this alleged encounter on U. S. battleship was said to have been sunk and another damaged.

The Japanese did, however, make an admission of damage suffered at the hands of U. S. forces. They said that one cruiser was damaged and a submarine sunk off Davao, Jan. 4.

Launch New Attack On West Malaya

SINGAPORE —(U.P.)— Japanese forces supported by armored units launched a heavy attack on British imperial positions on the west Malaya coast today, seeking to rip through the empire lines in a sector in which, it was admitted, they had succeeded in effecting local penetration.

The new attack had come after a brief lull during which Japanese planes bombed ferociously on the west and east coasts, apparently in preparation for new attempts to land troops behind the British lines.

On the west the Japanese bombings centered on Port Swettenham, 200 miles up the coast, but on the east side they were concentrated in the Mersing area only 75 miles north of this island

Dispatches reported, however, that there had been no new landings as yet and it was asserted that on the west coast Japanese penetration had been effected on only a small scale, with the empire lines holding well.

Japs Set To Lose 75 Per Cent of Army

BATAVIA—(INS)—The Japanese are willing to suffer 75 per cent casualties in order to attain their objectives, according to war correspondents returning to Batavia from the Mayalan front today.

The correspondent for the N. E. I. army newspaper Geeftacht said: "If a quarter of the original force reaches its destination, the Japanese command seems satisfied.

"Detachments are merely ordered to occupy certain objectives. They are absolutely free to choose their own route and method."

Japs Say Singapore Bombed Repeatedly

TOKYO—(By official Japanese wireless) —(INS)— Japan's imperial headquarters announced today that the Singapore area has been "repeatedly bombed," including the Tengah, Kalang and Sembawah airdromes.

(The London Evening Star quoted the Tokyo radio as announcing that British resistance is stiffening in Malaya, particularly in the Selangor region.

GET FEDERAL PAY

COLUMBUS —(AP)— Despite a dispute between the federal employment service and the Ohio Bureau of Unemployment compensation, 158 workers in the bureau will receive their first federal pay checks Jan. 15, Edward L. Keenan of Cleveland, regional FES director, declared last night.

3,000 Auto Workers to Lose Jobs Says Union Man.

SPRINGFIELD—(INS)—About 3,000 Springfield auto workers faced lay-offs today because of the curtailment of auto production in the government's defense plans, according to UAW-CIO Representative Tom Hendricks.

About 2,500 workers of the truck assembly plant of the International Harvester company will be out of work temporarily as will 500 employes of Buckeye, Bumpers, bumper and hub-cap manufacturing concern, he said.

GERMANS START NEW RETREAT

Fall Back Towards Tripoli Before British Forces In North Africa.

ouflaged dugouts heated by stoves and covered with six or seven tiers of logs.

The dispatches did not say whether these were outposts or part of the main German defenses, but certainly indicated that the invaders expected a long winter's stay.

In London, Lord Privy Seal Clement R. Attlee, who serves as Prime Minister Churchill's deputy, told parliament that "the initiative definitely has passed over to the Russians," and added:

"It is hardly even the pretense of the German high command that all these retreats are in accordance with plans, and these frantic appeals for warm clothing show more clearly than anything else that there has been a complete upset of Hitler's plans."

In this connection, London newspaper reports said machine-gun posts were being set up at strategic points in Berlin, manned by Hitler's own SS (Elite guard) troops, as a precaution against a coup d'etat, but a British foreign office spokesman warned that reports of a possible internal upheaval in Germany should be treated with reserve.

In the North African campaign, the disclosure that British forces had advanced a total of 600 miles meant, if the distance given were airline, that they had cut around far to the rear of the retreating main Axis armies to somewhere in the vicinity of Misurata, Mediterranean seaport, only 120 miles east of Tripoli. If the figure meant the longer caravan trails, it would place the British advance south of Agedabia where British troops were said to have penetrated 20 to 40 miles pursuing the remnants of Gen. Erwin Rommel's armored corps.

On the Soviet front, the German high command acknowledged continuing Russian attacks in the central (Moscow) and northern (Leningrad) sectors, and said German bombers attacked docks and shipping at Feodosiya, which the Russians have recaptured and were apparently using as a main base in the Crimean counter-offensive.

The British radio quoted reports that the Russians had landed at many new points, supported by Soviet warships, while a Moscow radio broadcast declared that the long-besieged Red garrison at Sevastopol had taken the offensive.

Defense Workers Hear Inspector General

In Mansfield last night in his capacity as inspector general for the Office of Civilian Defense, State Senator James Metzenbaum, Cleveland, spoke to Richland county civilian defense workers at the American Legion home. In picture at left are Judge G. E. Kalbfleisch, civilian defense chairman for Mansfield, Metzenbaum, and Sam Fox, commander of McVey post American Legion. At right, Metzenbaum addresses the crowd, predicting that civilian defense efforts will lead to even greater national unity than the attack on Pearl Harbor.

Richland Workers, Addressed By Metzenbaum Who Warns Against Complacency.

caused among civilians since the advent of the bomber, an advanced type, known as war first aid is essential.

"Doctors, nurses, firemen, and policemen—these groups can most readily become instructors in war first air because of their daily experience. They then can take on the teaching of others."

Contrasting the present world conflict with past wars, when the battle front was far off, Metzenbaum said that today the front has moved back to where youngsters are playing.

"Under modern war, no place is immune," he said.

The air raid warden was described by Metzenbaum as "the pivot and hub about which all air raid precautions center." He advised that communities setting up civilian defense machinery assign ex-servicemen to the posts of air raid wardens, because "they have had military training, army discipline, and many have actually been under fire."

He described the nurses' aid units, made up of women who have had three months of training instead of the three-year course required by most states for nurses. He declared:

"To the women of Ohio, let me say that there is need for 100,000 nurses aids in the country. And it appears as though if the war is of long duration, we shall need not one but quite a few hundreds of thousands."

Every worker has a responsibility in bringing about industrial efficiency, he said.

"Every time we read that the allies have been pushed back, or that an allied ship, large or small, has been sunk, we are very conscious of the seriousness of it," he stated. "But some how, when we read of a fire or something of the sort in a factory, we don't attach too much importance to it.

"Today, we need every factory and every plant, regardless of how large or how small, functioning as efficiently as it can. That's why every plant, no matter how small, should have its own fire brigade. This brigade must know exactly what steps to take if a fire should break out, and perhaps even more important — must be fire conscious and alert against the conditions that might tend toward a fire in the future."

Metzenbaum impressed on his hearers, many of them from small towns and rural areas, that civilian defense is not a job for congested areas alone.

"This country is not only the arsenal of democracy," he asserted. "America is called upon to become the food larder of the world. Every farm must produce twice as much as ever before. There is a job here for everyone in the Grange, and the Farm Bureau, and all others on the farm."

Sam Fox, commander of McVey post, American Legion, spoke briefly, and Municipal Judge G. E. Kalbfleisch, introduced the speaker of the evening. Kalbfleisch, chairman of Mansfield's civilian defense committee, presented Metzenbaum as "a man well known to all citizens of Ohio as a courageous and honest public servant, who has given freely of his time without compensation during the past six months in the cause of civilian defense."

Tribunal Defines Case In Which Payment Can Be Made.

COLUMBUS —(UP)— The state supreme court has held that death, to be compensable, under the workmen's compensation act, must be the result of a sudden happening which causes physical injury or shock.

In a decision handed down late yesterday the high court reversed Tuscarawas county lower court decisions and held that Mildred Brandt Cordray and other heirs of Edward Brandt could not participate in the workmen's compensation fund because of Edward Brandt's death.

Brandt, a lineman, died Nov. 22, 1935, of cerebral hemorrhage while climbing a 100-foot steel tower.

furnace connection caused a blaze at 11:45 p. m. Wednesday at the home of R. S. Goldman, 582 Austin road. Firemen brought the flames under control with little damage reported.

Lester G. MacElvain, 43, Mansfield R. D. 3, was treated at General hospital today for head and face injuries he received at 4 a. m. today on U. S. Route 42, six miles northeast of Mansfield when his car crashed into the rear of a stalled truck.

State highway patrolmen said the truck, driven by William K. Oyler, 21, of Vinton, O., apparently stalled in the highway after the radiator froze. MacElvain said two cars were approaching in the opposite direction on the three-lane route and he was unable to pass the standing truck.

Although all the state was hit by the extreme cold, the worst of the cold wave was felt in the southeastern and eastern parts of the state. At Logan, southeast of Columbus, and Millport, near East Liverpool, the mercury dropped to 20 below zero this morning. It was 18 below at Lancaster and 17 below at Dover. Bucyrus reported 14 below.

Streets in Mansfield were almost deserted at 10 a. m. today and the few motorists who ventured out had no trouble finding a parking place in the downtown area. Scores of motorists couldn't get their cars started and garages and service stations did a rushing business in anti-freeze solutions and getting stubborn motors started.

Filling stations in many parts of the state were sold out of anti-freeze and government restrictions made it doubtful that any more can be obtained soon.

Farm experts declared the cold would reduce egg and milk production—now in high gear because of the war—and that egg prices probably would rise a few cents. They saw one advantage in the zero temperatures—insects would be frozen.

SEEK PERMIT TO BUILD CONDUIT THROUGH CITY

Ohio Bell Officials To Put In New Long-Distance Cable Network.

City council permission to run a new underground conduit system through Mansfield as part of a $1,583,000 program calling for construction of a new long-distance cable network with Mansfield has been requested by Bell Telephone company.

Representatives of the telephone company asked council to pass ordinance which would permit the company to build the subterranean line, running through the city from east to west.

The proposed line would connect long-distance lines from Massilion, Findlay, Delaware, Wooster, Galion and Marion and would lead to the new Ohio Bell repeater station being constructed at 131-137 West Second street, they said.

Council gave the ordinances first readings and requested its street and utilities committees and the city solicitor to investigate the problem.

The proposed conduit system would enter the city from U. S. route 30-E, near the city's sewage disposal plant. Wires would be run beneath the sewage plant, Rocky Fork creek and the many railroad tracks and streets intervening, finally connecting with Mansfield Telephone company conduits which would lead the new cables into the repeater station on Second street.

The local telephone company's underground conduits would also be used to carry the cable connection out Second street to Sturges avenue to Park avenue west and finally to U. S. route 30-S where the Ohio Bell would continue its underground system towards Galion.

This special network is being built, according to the Ohio Bell company representatives, to handle the increased flow of long-distance telephoning because of defense needs.

The new Mansfield building will house both the repeater equipment and long-distance switchboards, and will replace the old long-distance office in the Bird building. The company will spend $166,000 in Mansfield alone in making connections for the new network, $65,000 going for the land and new building on Second street.

TROOPS BRACE FOR 'ALL OUT' JAP ONSLAUGHT

Luzon Defenders Ready For Final Thrust as Enemy Strengthens Army.

"considerably more" troops than has MacArthur.

MacArthur himself, McCoy said, is in the field at the side of his troops, directing their operations in person. He naturally declined to indicate whether MacArthur's headquarters were on the Batan penisula or deep within Corregidor, which probably will be the citadel of the final U. S. stand on the islands.

The tone of the American communique was in striking contrast to Japanese propaganda claims on the progress of the Philippine campaign. The Tokyo radio took the line that the task of the American forces was "hopeless" and that they were being driven from position after position.

MacArthur, however, reported that "the morale and determination of the American and Philippine troops are high and that they may be counted on to continue their resistance with skill and courage."

It was apparent that MacArthur and his men were selling their lives as dearly as any American fighting men since the Alamo.

But it was a race against time—time for American planes to be flown east to battle stations in Burma, the Dutch East Indies and Australia. Time for American naval forces to reconcentrate in the southwest Pacific. Time for the British to catch a second wind in the defense of vital Singapore.

From British, Dutch, Australian and Chinese sources came indications of U. S. air and sea reinforcements flowing toward the battle area.

London understood that the small naval forces at the disposal of U. S. Admiral Thomas C. Hart shortly will be reinforced and Batavia reported Dutch confidence that the Netherlands East Indies can maintain their fighting front until American air aid reaches the Dutch island bases.

The Dutch breather assurance that they had available ample man power to operate as many tanks as American ships can rush to those far off positions. From Canberra came word that the Dutch, in conference with the Australians, are declaring for tactics and strategy which will call for establishment of a firm Allied line beyond which no Japanese can penetrate.

Axis propagandists busied themselves in circulating a detailed yarn concerning a big "naval battle" which they alleged occurred some 600 miles west of Davao. In this alleged encounter on U. S. battleship was said to have been sunk and another damaged.

The Japanese did, however, make an admission of damage suffered at the hands of U. S. forces. They said that one cruiser was damaged and a submarine sunk off Davao, Jan. 4.

Launch New Attack On West Malaya

SINGAPORE —(U.P.)— Japanese forces supported by armored units launched a heavy attack on British imperial positions on the west Malaya coast today, seeking to rip through the empire lines in a sector in which, it was admitted, they had succeeded in effecting local penetration.

The new attack had come after a brief lull during which Japanese planes bombed ferociously on the west and east coasts, apparently in preparation for new attempts to land troops behind the British lines.

On the west the Japanese bombings centered on Port Swettenham, 200 miles up the coast, but on the east side they were concentrated in the Mersing area only 75 miles north of this island.

Dispatches reported, however, that there had been no new landings as yet and it was asserted that on the west coast Japanese penetration had been effected on only a small scale, with the empire lines holding well.

Japs Set To Lose 75 Per Cent of Army

BATAVIA—(INS)—The Japanese are willing to suffer 75 per cent casualties in order to attain their objectives, according to war correspondents returning to Batavia from the Mayalan front today.

The correspondent for the N. E. I. army newspaper Geeftacht said: "If a quarter of the original force reaches its destination, the Japanese command seems satisfied.

"Detachments are merely ordered to occupy certain objectives. They are absolutely free to choose their own route and method."

Japs Say Singapore Bombed Repeatedly

TOKYO—(By official Japanese wireless) —(INS)— Japan's imperial headquarters announced today that the Singapore area has been "repeatedly bombed," including the Tengah, Kalang and Sembawah airdromes.

(The London Evening Star quoted the Tokyo radio as announcing that British resistance is stiffening in Malaya, particularly in the Selangor region.

GET FEDERAL PAY

COLUMBUS —(AP)— Despite a dispute between the federal employment service and the Ohio Bureau of Unemployment compensation, 158 workers in the bureau will receive their first federal pay checks Jan. 15, Edward L. Keenan of Cleveland, regional FES director, declared last night.

FACE LAYOFFS

3,000 Auto Workers to Lose Jobs Says Union Man.

SPRINGFIELD—(INS)—About 3,000 Springfield auto workers faced lay-offs today because of the curtailment of auto production in the government's defense plans, according to UAW-CIO Representative Tom Hendricks.

About 2,500 workers of the truck assembly plant of the International Harvester company will be out of work temporarily as will 500 employes of Buckeye, Bumpers, bumper and hub-cap manufacturing concern, he said.

GERMANS START NEW RETREAT

Fall Back Towards Tripoli Before British Forces In North Africa.

ouflaged dugouts heated by stoves and covered with six or seven tiers of logs.

The dispatches did not say whether these were outposts or part of the main German defenses, but certainly indicated that the invaders expected a long winter's stay.

In London, Lord Privy Seal Clement R. Attlee, who serves as Prime Minister Churchill's deputy, told parliament that "the initiative definitely has passed over to the Russians," and added:

"It is hardly even the pretense of the German high command that all these retreats are in accordance with plans, and these frantic appeals for warm clothing show more clearly than anything else that there has been a complete upset of Hitler's plans."

In this connection, London newspaper reports said machine-gun posts were being set up at strategic points in Berlin, manned by Hitler's own SS (Elite guard) troops, as a precaution against a coup d'etat, but a British foreign office spokesman warned that reports of a possible internal upheaval in Germany should be treated with reserve.

In the North African campaign, the disclosure that British forces had advanced a total of 600 miles meant, if the distance given were airline, that they had cut around far to the rear of the retreating main Axis armies to somewhere in the vicinity of Misurata, Mediterranean seaport, only 120 miles east of Tripoli. If the figure meant the longer caravan trails, it would place the British advance south of Agedabia where British troops were said to have penetrated 20 to 40 miles pursuing the remnants of Gen. Erwin Rommel's armored corps.

On the Soviet front, the German high command acknowledged continuing Russian attacks in the central (Moscow) and northern (Leningrad) sectors, and said German bombers attacked docks and shipping at Feodosiya, which the Russians have recaptured and were apparently using as a main base in the Crimean counter-offensive.

The British radio quoted reports that the Russians had landed at many new points, supported by Soviet warships, while a Moscow radio broadcast declared that the long-besieged Red garrison at Sevastopol had taken the offensive.

Defense Workers Hear Inspector General

caused among civilians since the advent of the bomber, an advanced type, known as war first aid is essential.

"Doctors, nurses, firemen, and policemen—these groups can most readily become instructors in war first air because of their daily experience They then can take on the teaching of others"

Contrasting the present world conflict with past wars, when the battle front was far off, Metzenbaum said that today the front has moved back to where youngsters are playing.

"Under modern war, no place is immune," he said.

The air raid warden was described by Metzenbaum as "the pivot and hub about which all air raid precautions center." He advised that communities setting up civilian defense machinery assign ex-servicemen to the posts of air raid wardens, because "they have had military training, army discipline, and many have actually been under fire"

He described the nurses' aid units, made up of women who have had three months of training instead of the three-year course required by most states for nurses. He declared:

"To the women of Ohio, let me say that there is need for 100,000 nurses aids in the country. And it appears as though if the war is of long duration, we shall need not one but quite a few hundreds of thousands."

Every worker has a responsibility in bringing about industrial efficiency, he said.

"Every time we read that the allies have been pushed back, or that an allied ship, large or small, has been sunk, we are very conscious of the seriousness of it," he stated. "But some how, when we read of a fire or something of the sort in a factory, we don't attach too much importance to it.

"Today, we need every factory and every plant, regardless of how large or how small, functioning as efficiently as it can. That's why every plant, no matter how small, should have its own fire brigade. This brigade must know exactly what steps to take if a fire should break out, and perhaps even more important — must be fire conscious and alert against the conditions that might tend toward a fire in the future."

Metzenbaum impressed on his hearers, many of them from small towns and rural areas, that civilian defense is not a job for congested areas alone.

"This country is not only the arsenal of democracy," he asserted. "America is called upon to become the food larder of the world Every farm must produce twice as much as ever before. There is a job here for everyone in the Grange, and the Farm Bureau, and all others on the farm."

Sam Fox, commander of McVey post, American Legion, spoke briefly, and Municipal Judge G. E. Kalbfleisch, introduced the speaker of the evening. Kalbfleisch, chairman of Mansfield's civilian defense committee, presented Metzenbaum as "a man well known to all citizens of Ohio as a courageous and honest public servant, who has given freely of his time without compensation during the past six months in the cause of civilian defense."

COURT RULES ON COMPENSATION

Tribunal Defines Case In Which Payment Can Be Made.

COLUMBUS —(UP)— The state supreme court has held that death, to be compensable, under the workmen's compensation act, must be the result of a sudden happening which causes physical injury or shock.

In a decision handed down late yesterday the high court reversed Tuscarawas county lower court decisions and held that Mildred Brandt Cordray and other heirs of Edward Brandt could not participate in the workmen's compensation fund because of Edward Brandt's death.

Brandt, a lineman, died Nov. 22, 1935, of cerebral hemorrhage while climbing a 100-foot steel tower.

furnace connection caused a blaze at 11:45 p. m. Wednesday at the home of R. S. Goldman, 582 Austin road. Firemen brought the flames under control with little damage reported.

Lester G. MacElvain, 43, Mansfield R. D. 3, was treated at General hospital today for head and face injuries he received at 4 a. m. today on U. S. Route 42, six miles northeast of Mansfield when his car crashed into the rear of a stalled truck.

State highway patrolmen said the truck, driven by William K. Oyler, 21, of Vinton, O., apparently stalled in the highway after the radiator froze. MacElvain said two cars were approaching in the opposite direction on the three-lane route and he was unable to pass the standing truck.

Although all the state was hit by the extreme cold, the worst of the cold wave was felt in the southeastern and eastern parts of the state. At Logan, southeast of Columbus, and Millport, near East Liverpool, the mercury dropped to 20 below zero this morning. It was 18 below at Lancaster and 17 below at Dover. Bucyrus reported 14 below.

Streets in Mansfield were almost deserted at 10 a. m. today and the few motorists who ventured out had no trouble finding a parking place in the downtown area. Scores of motorists couldn't get their cars started and garages and service stations did a rushing business in anti-freeze solutions and getting stubborn motors started.

Filling stations in many parts of the state were sold out of anti-freeze and government restrictions made it doubtful that any more can be obtained soon.

Farm experts declared the cold would reduce egg and milk production—now in high gear because of the war—and that egg prices probably would rise a few cents. They saw one advantage in the zero temperatures—insects would be frozen.

Charles Lindbergh, who said last March, "The Axis can't be beaten," is now offering to help prove that he was wrong.

Quip from London Punch: "All that Japan seems to demand of the world just now is the right of self-extermination."

"Complete unity" is such a recent attainment that some congressmen still fight shy of price control from fear that it would lose them votes.

Buy Stamps and Bonds Regularly

AS THE city and county organization gets under way, for sale of defense stamps and bonds, greater emphasis will be placed on regular purchase of these securities—daily, weekly or monthly, whichever is most convenient for individuals and families.

Except for a comparatively few who have already formed the habit of buying stamps or bonds regularly, the practice has been to make purchases occasionally, from a little spare cash, but it is now being pointed out that to wage war successfully, and on the vast scale planned, the government must have a regular and substantial flow of money from sale of stamps and bonds.

A plan of enforced savings is already under consideration in Washington and whether or not this is found necessary will depend largely on the extent of increased voluntary response to the appeal that all wage earners and salaried employes set aside part of every pay for stamps and bonds.

On this subject Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau said:

"When I say 'a part' I do not mean a mere token contribution of 1 per cent or 2 per cent of the weekly pay check. This is not a token war. It is not a 2 per cent war. It is not a war that can be fought with spare change.

"Each of us will have to figure out the very most that we can set aside to buy defense bonds, for our own good and the country's good, as long as the war may last."

The dimes of children will help, and the start-off of the high school band's drum major and majorettes with booklets of defense stamps provides an example of how young people can be encouraged to save and help, but there is also need for dollars, singly and in large numbers—and the people of this city and county must be depended upon to provide their share.

Books for Soldiers, Sailors, Marines

THE BIGGEST no-fee, no-fine lending library ever set up is planned by the American Library association with the help of the Red Cross and the United Service Organizations. They ask the public to supply 10,000,000 books for the men in the nation's armed forces. The books will be distributed at camps and recreation centers. Men in service may draw a book at one place and return it at another anywhere in the country. It will be a big job, of course, to keep the books from wandering too far afield and getting lost, but the readers are likely to be both appreciative and co-operative in this respect.

Books are being collected through local libraries. The public is asked to donate them. Books may come from home shelves or they may be bought especially for this great service library.

What books should be given? That is easy. Let every generous donor be guided by his own reading tastes. If he likes mystery yarns, he should send some of his favorites. They'll find their way into the hands of soldiers, sailors or marines who like them, too. Whether his choice is poetry, travel, essays, or plays, he may be sure his counterpart in such preference is serving the nation somewhere and will be grateful for choice volumes in any of the groups. The Golden Rule, applied to this specific problem, will provide plenty of just the reading stuff the service men want.

Time for LaGuardia To Quit One Job

NOW that the country is actually engaged in war, the office of director of civilian defense has ceased to be a part-time job—as it had been made by Fiorello LaGuardia, who is also mayor of New York city.

National organization for civilian defense, under war conditions, is more likely to require military direction, with civilian co-operaton, than being the part-time job of a man already burdened with the heavy responsibilities of chief executive of America's largest city.

In either one or the other capacity LaGuardia might give satisfactory service. He cannot do so in both. As he shows no inclination to resign as mayor of New York he should be immediately replaced by a full-time man as director of civilian defense.

Concentrated Education Being Tried

WITH colleges and graduate schools speeding their students to degrees in three years instead of four, speculation arises as to what they will do later, when the war is over.

Professional people—doctors, lawyers, educators, and so on—must have long and expensive training. It has made them start their working careers later than those who went into business or industry without special education.

If it is found now, through the nation's war experience, that it is possible to prepare them as thoroughly as before in a shorter time, the handicap of the delayed start will be partly overcome.

On the other hand, studying twelve months a year, without the yearly summer vacation, will mean that many of the ambitious young people who have largely worked their way through school will lack time for doing that. It will be harder for them to carry part-time jobs along with their study because the study will be more concentrated.

The pace will probably be too severe for some. In that case there may be a return to the four-year system with long summer vacations and briefer holidays at mid-winter and spring. Or both plans may be used—the speeded-up course for those who prefer it and a longer one for others.

The grocery store war stategists of the old days have been succeeded by the slot machine addicts who pause, after the third marble, to explain how they would do it if they were in MacArthur's place.

It may at least be hoped that the shortage of tin will reduce the surplus of tin-horn politicians.

WHERE YOUR CONTRIBUTION HELPS

Believe Ground Attack Necessary

—By CARTER FIELD

WASHINGTON — This war, Roosevelt and Churchill are reluctantly agreed, will not be won by a blockade, and it will not be won by bombing.

This last was a hard decision to make. Both men had hoped strongly that when anti-Hitler air power reached sufficient superiority over the Nazis, the Germans could be bombed into submission.

Perhaps the failure of Hitler to bomb the British into submission should have convinced them earlier. But they were counting on something else. They were counting on the thought that the German morale was not as of tough a fibre as the British. They recalled that it was a collapse of German morale which ended the last war, not the victories won by the Allies in the field or on the sea.

BUT there has entered another factor, which a year ago was not considered important. This is anti-aircraft defense. It is perfectly true, as was figured a year ago, that no amount of anti-aircraft defense can prevent bombing. But the battle of Moscow has proved definitely that if the anti-aircraft is good enough, the bombers can be forced to fly so high that, bombsights or no bombsights, they cannot hit specific objectives, particularly if the objectives are small enough.

Reports from Moscow have demonstrated that all the "blitz" power of Goering's flyers was not enough to cause a great deal of damage. As this is written a fresh report just in from Moscow says that up until several days after Christmas not a single bomb had EVER HIT THE KREMLIN.

American reporters have told that while there may be holes in the streets occasionally, very little damage has been done to any of the buildings, and this despite the fact that frequently the fleets of bombers numbered 300 at a time, protected by an escort of fighters.

Another point down the same alley is that the anti-aircraft defenses of Berlin have made it very expensive indeed for the British to bomb that city. Just at present it happens we are in one of those phases of every military cycle. First, a new offensive weapon is improved or perfected, and for some time after that the offensive has the advantage. Then some defensive measure is conjured up, and the advantage goes the other way.

THE GERMANS won their smashing victories in France and Belgium and Holland when the panzer strategy was new. It did not work so well after the Russians had studied it for more than a year and worked out a defense. The same thing has been true of bombing. An aviation officer in the U. S. army, discussing the proposed bombing of objectives in Japan, said it would be surprising if the Japs have not learned something—first, from the fact that Berlin was making it difficult for British bombers, and later from the brilliant air defense of Moscow.

It is really this development, taken together with the supreme necessity of not weakening the Soviet front against Hitler, which brought President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill to see the logic of Stalin's not attacking Japan yet.

But by the same token all this spells a huge A. E. F., sooner or later, BEFORE we can have peace.

Man Against Shark

—By ELSIE ROBINSON

I CAN see nothing admirable about war. I believe it to be abominable, unnecessary, brutally unintelligent. Yet, if we are still so stupid that wars must happen, we should bring to them all we possess of courage, gallantry and control. And we should take from them inspiration that will be treasure for generations to come.

Such inspiration is already happening in this war with Japan—deeds infinitely moving and heartening. They are beyond all price, such deeds, no matter who performs them. For they carry on that hope of greater life which first started our struggle out of the jungle . . . which, please God, will some day lead us into a world in which there is no war, no hate.

I shall tell of such acts as they occur. If you know of others, more obscure, perhaps, but equally gallant, will you send them to me? We need to hear of them these days, to lighten the intolerable anguish.

THE thing lay low in the sun path, lifting, falling, barely visible. To Captain Frederick B. Goncalves, master of the S. S. Agwiworld, proceeding peacefully north, 100 miles from San Francisco, it was, at first, merely part of the gloom and glitter of the long Pacific roll. Feet braced against the swaying deck, he stared, unconcerned, around the blue, unbroken sweep of horizon. Then, startled, gripped his glasses . . . unbelieving.

The thing had come nearer. It was no longer a shadow. It was . . . it wasn't . . . it couldn't be and yet it was . . . A SUB! A Japanese sub . . . one of the wolf pack which, he'd heard rumored, was circling the coast. But this—THIS—was no rumor! God help them, they were in for it now! For here . . . nosing its black snout toward them at racing speed, came DEATH!

What does a man think of as he faces head-on death? I wouldn't know. Many things, perhaps. A wife . . . a child . . . a home . . . or some ambition he's been nursing many years. Beside a man's own normal wish to save his life. Perhaps he thought of all these things and more, Captain Goncalves, master of the Agwiworld. But there was one thing only that he fought to do—TO SAVE HIS MEN.

HE HAD NO GUN—AGAINST AN ARMORED SHARK. A shark that fairly seemed to cleave the air as it came! He had, thanks be, a radio of sorts. With which they warned the unsuspecting world that Death was on the way —BUT SENT NO S. O. S

No guns or gadgets which would save their lives. But they'd A MAN! A man with but one thought—to save his crew. A man who did the only thing that he could do.

CHARGE HEAD-ON TOWARD THE SHARK!

CHARGE HEAD-ON TOWARD THAT BELCHING HELL!

THEN WHEELED, WITH SUB SHOTS SPRAYING ON HIM, FORE AND AFT! AND ZIG-ZAGGED, HEADING ALWAYS FOR THE SHORE, BUT GIVING THEM AS LITTLE BROADSIDE TARGET AS HE COULD.

Forty minutes it lasted. Forty minutes of concentrated hell. The racing, leaping shark, spewing its deadly spittle on the unarmed boat. The boat that darted, wheeled, lunged and reversed, under the impulse of a chilled-steel mind. Forty incredible minutes with shots falling within fifteen feet! Yet none hitting. And every white man standing at his post, as though he, too, were made of hammered steel.

You know the rest. How they made it without losing a man. How quietly they've shrugged it off since. Nobody boasting. Nobody grabbing the spotlight. Nobody even thinking what this will mean some day.

Some day when some man's up against the works. Some day when a gang of men are down to their last drop of water, their last crust of bread, their last merciful bullet.

THEN I'M THINKING THEY'LL REMEMBER THE AGWIWORLD . . . AND A MAN NAMED GONCALVES . . . WHO, UNARMED, DEFEATED A SHARK.

More Reverses Expected Before Allies Can Turn Table on Japan

—By DREW PEARSON and ROBERT S. ALLEN

WASHINGTON—Many sage remarks still are being quoted in the wake of Winston Churchill, and one of the most significant was made to friends in regard to future Allied strategy against Japan.

Asked what the United States and Britain could do to check Japan, Churchill replied:

"The Japanese have been eating all over the table. They have big appetites and for the time being there may be nothing much we can do about it. But sooner or later we shall turn over the table."

This strategy of turning over the table, in other words directing a move at the main islands of Japan themselves, is something which has always been in the books of the war plans experts.

However, the American public may have to reconcile itself to more discouraging news from the south Pacific before Allied strength reaches a point where the table can be turned.

General MacArthur's situation in the Philippines has been compared with that of Aguinaldo, the Filipino guerilla leader, who kept American forces at bay for two years after the Spanish-American war. It has been hoped that MacArthur, like Aguinaldo, could fight in the Philippine jungles for an equal period.

However, Aguinaldo never had to cope with the airplane, and MacArthur does. Airplanes can search every inch of Philippine jungle; and in addition, MacArthur's munitions will not hold out forever.

The situation of Corregidor, island fortress at the mouth of Manila Harbor, is better, but even so it is not half as good as the army's original expectation that it could hold out for a year or so. For apparently, the ground-minded generals of the war department did not do very much about protecting Corregidor from the air.

It can hold out for some time, but sooner or later we face the prospect of seeing the Stars and Stripes hauled down from the main islands of the Philippines.

Capital Chaff.

SECRETARY OF WAR STIMSON has been shaking up some of his generals, and has put General Raymond Lee temporarily in charge of military intelligence. Lee was former U. S. military attache in London and an A-1 officer. Army people hope he stays in charge of the intelligence service. . . . To make more office space in Washington, the Farm Credit administration is being moved to Chicago. . . . Ex-Ambassador Joe Davies has written a book on his experiences in Russia which should be must reading for every member of congress. It is a magnificent job. . . . Ex-Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy is now in Florida writing a book on his experiences at the court of St. James's. If Joe is frank—and he usually is—the book ought to be a best seller. . . . Fifty per cent of our vitamin A is being sent to England. This, together with the shortage of fish livers and oils from Norway and Japan, is causing a shortage of vitamins in the U. S. A.

WLW Iceland.

THE largest standard-wave broadcasting apparatus in the U. S. A.—owned by WLW Cincinnati—may be set up in Iceland to drown out Hitler's rasping broadcasts to the German people.

For many years WLW operated a 500,000 watt station in Cincinnati, but was forced by the Federal Communications commission to reduce to 50,000 watts, which is the maximum for ordinary commercial stations in the U. S. A. Therefore, WLW has now offered its big 500,000 watt set to the government to be established in Iceland. Since Hitler's stations are nowhere near as strong as 500,000 watts, WLW's beams from Iceland could drown out his voice every time he went on the air.

Furthermore, WLW Iceland would not operate on short wave, which the German people are not permitted to hear. It would operate on a standard broadcasting beam and would come in over the ordinary German radio. By turning a button in the station in Iceland, the wave-length could be changed to cut in on any German program.

There is one catch in the proposal, however. WLW Cincinnati wants to make a deal with the government whereby it would be permitted to set up another 500,000 watt station in the United States in return for sending its equipment to Iceland.

Note: The 100,000 watt radio station which the Donovan committee is transferring from Schenectady, N. Y., to San Francisco for propaganda broadcasts to Japan is for short wave broadcasts only.

Scrap Iron Went to Japan.

IT MAY be that those who let millions of tons of scrap iron go to Japan are not too anxious to advertise our present dearth of scrap, but the real fact is that it is so serious as to cause the shutdown of nine blast furnaces in Youngstown, Ohio, alone.

To meet the shortage, the OPM has been conducting an experimental campaign to collect scrap iron in Erie, Pa., and is launching other campaigns in Boston, Pittsburgh, Bridgeport and Akron. However, the campaign is going very slowly. Chief trouble is that collections are made through the normal scrap iron trade.

Therefore, it looks as if the American public might have to take things in hand. A survey of Butler county, Ohio, shows that every farmer has an average of about 500 pounds of usable scrap iron and rubber rusting or rotting behind his barn. On this basis, the OPM estimates that it should be possible to collect 1,500,000 tons of scrap from American farmers.

Not many people realize the importance which scrap plays in the iron and steel industry. Ordinarily, steel is made fifty per cent from ore and fifty per cent from scrap iron. But today ordinary supplies of scrap iron are diminished, not only by previous sales to Japan but by the fact that war industries supply no scrap. Many tanks, guns, and military motor trucks are shipped off to Egypt, Malaya or Russia. They never come back. Ordinarily, industry supplies its own scrap iron from junked automobiles, etc. But now there will be fewer automobiles to junk.

So the scrap iron problem is one which will require every farmer and householder to look around behind his barn or in his basement to see what he can spare for war industries.

Goodbye, Lead.

YOU CAN check off lead as the next strategic material to be put under interdict for civilian use. OPM's banning order will be issued shortly. That will mean the end of lead foil and numerous other items of normal everyday use. One possible exception may be lead for automobile batteries, but even that will be under severe restrictions.

Reason for the ban is inadequacy of domestic supply to meet the increasing need for bullets.

Man About Manhattan

—By GEORGE TUCKER

NEW YORK—The war is going to make a respectable word of "escape." For the past decade the sterner critics of life and letters haven't found a harsher word to call anybody than "escapologist." Those who preferred the lighter forms of recreation, either in the library or the theater, were accused of ignoring the world's downhill spin. They shirked a duty by remaining light-hearted.

Now, suddenly, because of the war glooms, the gay trifles of the stage, screen and bookshelves have assumed a useful place in the world. The mind needs release from the news of the day, and such plays as "Let's Face it," "Blithe Spirit" and "Best Foot Forward" are joyous antidotes for care. So are the thriller movies, like "Suspicion" and "The Maltese Falcon," and novels like "Saratoga Trunk" and "Wild Is The River," far removed from the present.

DEFENDERS of "escape" works always charged discrimination. They argued that the taunt of "running from life" was never flung at persons who pampered other appetites. Let a man buy himself a good dinner, they pointed out, and nobody accused him of numbing his mind with rich food. But let him try to digest that dinner over a light book, or at a frivolous play, and the arrows of scorn pinked his poor hide.

Nor would the women stand for classification as escapists because of their fondness for dress. Their defense was that fashion gave employment to seamstresses, cutters and all the other skills marshalled in keeping them well dressed. It was an excuse, incidentally, denied to the devotees of escape literature.

RESTORING "escape's" good name should be a blessing to the cinema. There, more than anywhere else, is a task of keeping abreast of trends. The hard-punching war films, which dared not identify the villainous armies, were a constant headache to the film-makers. With our nation nominally neutral, it was a risk to be specific, and the films that really started out to say something were vitiated by necessary compromises. Now the lid is off. They can romp and play and take all the reins off nonsense.

A survey of the entertainment offerings of 1917, when America first experimented with morale building, shows a similar renascence of "escape stories." The first several plays that opened after April of that year, if they showed just a trace of serious thought, perished instanter. But after a few daring producers invested heavily in musical shows the public declared itself for laughs.

TODAY IN HISTORY

The Battle of New Orleans was fought on Jan. 8, 1815, after the treaty of peace had been signed. On this day the British attempted to take the American position by assault, but were met by vigorous opposition. Within half an hour, 2,000 British were killed. Andrew Jackson, defender of the city, became a national hero as a result.

Words of Wisdom.

Hints on Etiquette.

It is not courteous nor considerate of a bereaved person to ask them for particulars of their bereavement in public. Write a note of sympathy, call if you can, but don't expect them to speak of the grief. Talking of a sorrow often breaks down one's self-control, and no thoughtful person wishes to do that to a friend.

One-Minute Test Answers.

1. They are dropped from the Social Register.
2. Either fur or wool.

A Farmer's Diary

Winter Garden

—By CALVIN A. BYERS

OUR ACRE of garden looks like a barren waste. The ground is frozen with an inch of snow on top. Old tomato plants —which were latest of last year's harvest—stand like whited skeletons. Leaves from the woodsy slope blow across the snow like moving shadows. The year-old fruit trees shiver in the winter blasts. Ice—snow—frozen earth —yet this is the garden I cherish.

Beneath that snowy blanket changes are constantly going on that will bring, next year, a richer, more fruitful harvest. Stones are disintegrating, crumbling like the very dirt that conceals them; vegetable matter is decaying slowly; moisture permeates each tiny crumb of soil. Worms move up and down mixing raw with cultivated soil. And deep within the vital covering are held captive the unseen rays of stored up sunlight from warm summer days. What appears discouraging when I look out my window now is not in fact a gloomy picture. Nature is resting, all her processes hibernating—winter has come, but spring is not far behind.

There is, to me, something steadfastly reassuring about the quiet, resting garden. Here, "when spring comes tripping north" the snow will melt; deep gouging icy needles will disappear; and what is left will be a mantle of mellow, rejuvenated earth, where I can scatter seeds from my partially open hand, and cover them—where this year, more perhaps than any other, there will be joy and satisfaction in growing the fruits and vegetables for our family.

Every family on a farm should make the garden produce their essential food. In this practice is rural thrift and useful, healthful work for every member of the household.

U. S. Department of Agriculture will furnish information as to quantities per person—and in winter time there is leisure to plan what your own family needs to provide. To have a plan and then work the plan will give us enough food to win this war. While the garden rests, let us not, ourselves, be asleep.

CITY TO JOIN 'DIME MARCH'

Mrs. Reese Named Chairman of Paralysis Fund Campaign For City, County.

Mansfield and Richland county will join the rest of the state and nation Jan. 12, in launching the annual "March of Dimes," conducted to combat infantile paralysis.

This was announced today simultaneous with the acceptance of Mrs. Louise Reese, 408 Henry street, to again serve as county chairman. Her appointment was made by J. E. Trautman of Columbus, chairman of the state committee.

Mrs. Reese is chairman of the Richland chapter of the National Foundation, a permanent organization set up to direct activities tending towards the prevention of the disease in Richland county.

The county campaign will be waged partially through installing coin boxes in business houses, contacting industries and seeking the co-operation of clubs and organizations, according to Mrs. Reese.

Plans for the campaign are now being perfected and various committees will be named within the next few days. Postmaster H. E. Homberger has been appointed by Mrs. Reese to handle the campaign from the standpoint of contacting all postmasters in the county.

The "March of Dimes," which gives the county 50 per cent of all contributions will end Jan. 30 on the 60th birthday of President Roosevelt who originated the campaign some years ago.

They'll Never See Moscow Now--Nor Berlin

Their bodies frozen starkly stiff in the bitter cold, according to the Moscow censor, these Germans lie in the snow which blankets the eastern front. Moscow has claimed that since Jan. 1 Russian forces have killed 10,000 retreating Germans and retaken 572 Russian towns.

LAWYER AND MINISTER CAST IN LEADS OF COMMUNITY PLAY

A Mansfield lawyer and a minister had stepped into leading roles in the Community Players' forthcoming production, "George Washington Slept Here," today, and a high school pupil was enlisted to fill a third vacancy when illness and departure from the city made it necessary for three members of the cast to turn in their scripts to Mrs. E. K. Bacon, play director.

Despite the fact that the play is scheduled for production two weeks from tomorrow night, Jan. 20, there will be no postponement of the three-act comedy by Moss Hart and George S Kaufman, according to Mrs. Bacon. The Players bear a reputation for presenting their plays on schedule and that precedent will not be shattered now, she said.

Atty. Herbert H. Schettler, known to Mansfield audiences for his work in previous Players' productions including "Your Uncle Dudley," in which he had the lead, "First Lady" and "Petticoat Fever," will play the role of "Newton Fuller," in place of Gerald Van Arnam, who recently became ill. "Fuller" is the man in the play who buys a ramshackled farmhouse on the premise that the "Father of His Country" had actually slept there.

Rev. Glenn F. Lewis, pastor of Grace Episcopal church, has accepted the role of "Steve Eldridge," a young man who helps provide the romantic interest in the play. He replaces Bruce Hardy, who has been transferred to Detroit by Westinghouse.

The third change in cast was necessitated by Gene Gump leaving for New York in the near future. Conner Faye, a Mansfield high school student, has been enlisted to play his part, that of "Raymond," a youthful bit.

Due to the replacements, rehearsals will be held every night from now until production, Mrs Bacon said The Players use a room at the court house for rehearsals.

Three other additional players have also been added to the cast including Miss Evelyn Goldman, William Flynn and Al Rosenkranz. Miss Goldman will play "Hester," the maid; Flynn, the role of "Leggett Frazer," and Rosenkranz, that of "Tommy Hughes."

Other characters in the cast are: "Kimber," Herman Clingan, "Annabelle Fuller," Mrs. Joy Herbert, "Madge Fuller," Patricia Palmer, "Katie," Mrs. Lester Bauer of Little Washington; "Mrs. Douglas," Mrs. Edwin M. Olin; "Clayton Evans," Ruhland Isaly; "Rena," Sylvia Frankel, "Sue Barrington," "Eleanor Hattman; "Uncle Stanley," Reynolds Hodgson, "Miss Wilcos," Martha Hartman, and "Prescott," Cliff Smith.

MEET FRIDAY TO ORGANIZE ENLISTMENT

Mansfielders Plan For Group Volunteers For Service In Army Air Corps.

Announcement by two Mansfielders that they were arranging a meeting with a view toward a group enlistment in the army air corps has brought enthusiastic response from many young men throughout Richland county.

More than 100 from this area will attend the meeting Friday evening, P. H. Downs and Bernard P. Brown, who made the arrangements, said today. Major J. L. Zimmerman, Mansfielder now attached to the air corps office in Cleveland, will be the speaker and will show motion pictures of life in the flying service.

He will be introduced by Sam Fox, commander, McVey post, American Legion. Also present will be the color guard from the post.

The idea for the meeting has grown considerably from the time a week ago that Brown, who's 22 and the son of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen J. Brown, 41 Baldwin avenue, decided he would enlist in the air corps. He told Downs, who lives at 114 West First street, about his plans.

Downs recounted to the young man his own experience in World war No. 1, and there was one part of the story that particularly attracted Brown's attention. That was the fact that when Downs enlisted, as a youth of 17, he was one of more than 50 boys from the town of Smithville, Tex., who enlisted at one time.

Because of the group enlistment, the whole crowd served throughout the war together in the same regiment. Except for a few members, like Downs, who left the home town, the 50 enlistees have stuck together through the years.

Brown promptly decided to talk with his friends about enlisting with him. Within a few days, three other youths had decided to go along with him. Word got around, and others started calling him for information.

Arrangements were made for Major Zimmerman to come here for the meeting, which is set for 7:30 p. m. Friday in the auditorium of the Westinghouse "H" building. A large Mansfield group is expected, as well as representatives from nearby towns.

After two years in the 66th Engineers, Downs remained in Europe following the armistice, while most of his home town buddies returned to Smithville. He spent eight more years in Europe working for the treasury department of the Polish government for the first year.

The remainder of the time he served in various cities in Finland, Sweden, and the Baltic states in the employ of a British exporting firm. On his return to this country, he entered the advertising business and for 10 years has been in the advertising department of Westinghouse here. Since 1935 he has been manager of the company's advertising service department.

Organize Group Air Corps Enlistment Here

A Mansfielder's story of a group enlistment of boys in his home town in the first World war has led to plans for a similar enlistment by Mansfield youths in the Army Air Corps. Above left, is P. H. Downs, one of 50 enlistees from Smithville, Tex., in the first war. Right is Bernard P. Brown, 22, who started the idea of a group from the Mansfield area enlisting together. Lower photo is of Major J. L. Zimmerman of the Army Air Corps, who will address a meeting arranged for Friday evening for all youths from the area interested in enlistment.

Kellogg Audubon Club Hears Talk On Conservation

Arthur Harper, of the conservation department of the state board of education, spoke recently before members and guests of the Kellogg Audubon club at the Grace Episcopal church. His subject was "Education in Conservation."

Mr. Harper told of the changes in methods of teaching conservation in schools. The old text-book type of learning has been replaced by actual experimentation in the hills and valleys of Ohio, he said. The speaker reminded his audience that America's natural wealth has been sadly wasted for many years through ignorance and short-sightedness.

Economic success, as a nation, depends a great deal upon the conservation of natural resources. Mr. Harper stressed the fact that in attempting to rebuild the wealth of wild life, formerly abundant in this state, it will be necessary first to provide a fitting environment.

Each phase of nature is so closely related to the whole, said Mr. Harper, that, in conserving natural resources, all parts must be considered.

Mr. Harper was secured as speaker for this occasion through the courtesy of the Speakers' Bureau on Conservation of the Junior Association of Commerce, with Roscoe McGinty as chairman.

Next meeting of the club will be held at 2 p. m. on Feb. 3 at the time of Mrs. R. N. Campbell, Glenwood boulevard. Mrs. Van Cook will present a paper on "Snow Crystals."

BARCLAY ON BRIDGE

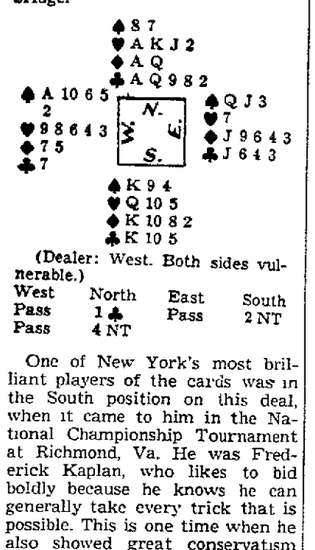
BY

Shepard Barclay

"The Authority on Authorities"

FINESSE THAT 8-SPOT

There are players who seem to have a congenital fear of finessing low cards. The fine card reader, however, can sometimes know that a little spot card is marked as a sure winner because he can tell just what one of the defenders has in his hand. This kind of reasoning is among the prettiest things in advanced bridge.



(Dealer: West. Both sides vulnerable.)

West	North	East	South
Pass	1 ♣	Pass	2 NT
Pass	4 NT

One of New York's most brilliant players of the cards was in the South position on this deal, when it came to him in the National Championship Tournament at Richmond, Va. He was Frederick Kaplan, who likes to bid boldly because he knows he can generally take every trick that is possible. This is one time when he also showed great conservatism by not jumping to slam over his partner's invitation, but he proceeded to make one just the same.

West led his spade 5 to the J and K, and the club 10 was led to the Q. The diamond A and Q and the heart 2 to the 10 were followed by the diamond K and the heart 5 to the A, East discarding a diamond.

That card was the key to the hand. It showed that West had five hearts. If he also had at least four spades, as shown by his lead, he could not have had more than one or two clubs. If he had two and one of them was the J, he probably would have put it on the 10. Hence East was marked with probably four clubs to the J. Consequently Mr Kaplan now led the club 8 and let it ride, playing the five from his hand. When this won, he led to the club K, overtook the heart Q with the K and scored the Heart J, Club A, dropping the J and the club 9. Thus he took all 13 tricks.

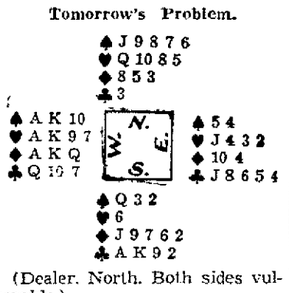
Tomorrow's Problem.



(Dealer. North. Both sides vulnerable.)

If North leads the diamond 8, how should West play for 3-No Trumps on this deal?

"Pitfalls of Love"

(A Sequel to Marriage Meddlers)

By ADELE GARRISON

"Oh, the poor darling!" Mary exclaimed in quick, affectionate anxiety, springing to her feet. "I'll rush right over to see him."

Fortunately I was between her and the door, and was able to stem her headlong rush. I caught her arm and held it firmly, as she looked at me in blank amazement.

"That is just what you must not do," I said firmly. "You must never mention Redfield, or your engagements with him, to Noel, or thank him for consenting to your going on with this work."

"But why?" she said in bewilderment. "I don't understand."

I took a deep breath—I felt that I needed it—and pushed her gently into a chair.

"Please listen carefully while I tell you what your husband said," I asked her. Then I plunged directly into a verbatim report of my interview with Noel.

Mary's Predicament.

Mary listened without a word of interruption until I stopped speaking; waited, even then, until she saw that I had no more to tell her. Then, with sobered face and saddened eyes, she made her comment.

"If it weren't for Marion," she began, then stopped and looked at me.

"Please tell me what to do, Auntie Madge," she pleaded. "I'm so up in the air! It's horrible to have Noel suffer this way, and yet there's Marion—and those other disloyal activities of Steve's. I'm just torn in two."

"I know, darling girl," I said, reaching over and taking her twisting hands in mine. "But this is something in which I cannot possibly give you any advice. You must make your own decision unhampered. Can't you see that?"

"I suppose so," she said despondently. Then, after a second or two, she made a naive amendment.

Wants A Suggestion.

"You couldn't just tell me what you would do if you were in my place?"

"No, I'm not even going to do that," I said firmly. "It wouldn't be fair to you, or to Noel, or to me. On something not so vital I could advise you, but not on this."

She sprang up and began to range up and down the room, while I sat watching her, wondering how I could explain to my father this unexpected set-back to his plans, should Mary's reluctance to hurt her husband triumph over her sense of duty to Marion and to her country.

"How can I go on with this?" she suddenly exploded, whirling to face me, her eyes tempestuous, her voice raucous, metallic. "It's an entirely different propositions now than it was before last night. Can't you see that?"

Bitter At Redfield

"You mean because of that slurring remark about Noel which Stephen made?" I said when I saw that she was waiting for my answer.

"Of course," she retorted. "That simply tied it. I've been getting terribly bored, not with the things I was finding out—those intrigued me, all right—but Steve's general inanity wearied me to the point of tears. I had no particular personal rancor against him, however, until last night.

"That lying, cowardly crack at Noel did something to me inside," she went on. "I don't think I ever was so furious in my life. I could have torn Steve to pieces and boiled the pieces in oil. And of course that's going to make this job of getting him in good humor again something extra poisonous, for did I lay him out!

"I only had a minute of whispering, for Papa Veritzen was at my heels, but when I got through little Stevie's veneer of civilization was badly cracked. I think if we'd been alone I'd have had red marks on my throat."

Mary Put to the Test.

She raised her arms high in the air, with fingers working, then brought them down again, her hands clenched into fists.

"I loathe Steve," she exclaimed hotly. "I can't bear to be in the same room with him. How am I ever going to go on with this thing?"

She had worked herself up to a flaming mood which had a touch of hysteria in it. It was time, I thought, for a dash of cold water.

"Then shall I tell my father," I queried quietly, "that I have secured Noel's consent to his plan, but that you refuse to go on with it?"

HOROSCOPE

For Friday, Jan. 9.

The astral auguries for this day must be read as conflicting and contradictory. The mentality may be keyed to high tempo, sensitive, creative and inspirational, while at the same time it may be subject to over activity, impractical and carried away by vague impression or premonitions. Psychic impulses should be submitted to logic and sound judgment, thus turning them into workable channels. A great proclivity toward over generosity, expansiveness, prodigality and indulgence may be hazardous.

Those whose birthday it is may be at the threshold of a year of excellent openings for putting into expression many exceptional talents, of a literary, poetic or artistic type. There may be danger of being carried to excess in such direction by an over-stimulated brain, stimulated by peculiar psychical or mystical urges or by temperamental sensitivity and impressionism. A tendency to extravagance, indulgence, over-enthusiasm and prodigality of feelings and emotions may heighten such expansiveness.

A child born on this day should have much ambition in exceptional lines, professional, humanitarian and benevolent. It will be equipped for an out of the ordinary place in poetry, music, art.

WOULD STIFFEN THEFT PENALTY

State-Wide Drive Launched; Kalbfleisch Vows Maximum For Tire Thieves.

A state-wide move to make tire thefts a federal offense in view of the scarcity of tires was under way today, while in Mansfield Municipal Judge G. E. Kalbfleisch said he would impose the maximum penalty in cases involving the theft of auto or truck tires.

The Mansfield court has handled no tire theft cases since the tire ban was imposed, but authorities anticipate an increase in the number of cases as tires now in use begin to wear out and others are not available.

Judge Kalbfleisch said the maximum penalty for the theft of tires and other equipment from cars or trucks is 90 days in jail and a $500 fine. The charge must be reduced to petty larceny if the article is not attached to the vehicle. In that case, however, the maximum penalty is 30 days in jail and a $200 fine.

The move to make tire thefts a federal offense was started by the regional motor transportation committee which met yesterday in Columbus. The proposal will be considered at a sub-committee meeting in Akron Friday and submitted to authorities in Washington, Jan. 15, a press dispatch said.

Meanwhile, Col. Lyn Black, head of the state highway patrol, urged motorists to make a record of the serial numbers of their tires so they can be traced if stolen. He also suggested that motorists keep their cars in locked garages or at least where they can be watched.

CHAPTER III

The maid was arranging china on a small table near the windows overlooking the lake, and presently she brought in smoking hot bacon, crisp toast and steaming, fragrant cups of coffee. In an instant Sally was on her feet. "Does my nose deceive me, or do I smell food?" she demanded.

Louise chuckled. "Yes'm, you sure do."

"Then come and get it, Linda," Sally sang out, seating herself at the table. "Hmm, but it looks so good!"

Linda studied the colored maid's delighted face. Already she was won over to Sally's side. Linda wished she could be as much at ease and friendly as Sally, instead of covering her own shyness with a brusqueness she did not feel. Sally, on the other hand, made new friends easily and quickly. Hugh once said of his wife, "Babies and animals love her, and servants fall down and worship her."

Yet, despite her timidity, those who were able to break down Linda's reserve found a sweet, gentle girl, generous and loyal to a fault.

"What's the matter, Linda? You aren't eating," said Diane, appearing beside the table, smart and sophisticated in a sleek, black frock.

Linda flushed. "I—I was thinking."

"Better save that for later," Diane admonished, "or Louise will be highly insulted. She's very proud of her culinary ability."

Making a pretense of eating, Linda studied the artist carefully. Diane was undoubtedly pretty—with her titian hair rolled into a sleek page-boy bob, and with wide blue eyes that could be slate-green when she was angry. Yet Linda decided, Diane had changed since she last visited Prairievale. There was a certain hardness around her red mouth, an indifferent shrug to her slim shoulders that spelled boredom. The difference was not tangible, yet it was there. Even Sally seemed to sense it, for her eyes rested on Diane more than once in puzzled fashion, as though she, too, was trying to fathom the change.

Diane had always been rather worldly in looks and temperament. Her striking appearance, her artistic talents had set her apart from other Prairievale citizens. Her father had been an outstanding artist, her mother a musician, totally unlike the sister with whom Diane made her home following their untimely deaths. In Prairievale Diane had been a suppressed, almost tragic little figure, misunderstood by her aunt, held in awe by classmates. No one was surprised when, immediately following her eighteenth birthday anniversary she took the money which had been placed in trust by her parents until she reached that age, and ran away.

Her climb up the ladder of success had been rapid, until now she moved in a smart and exclusive circle. But she had never forgotten her unhappy childhood in Prairievale. Her dislike for the Iowa village was evident in her voice, her expressions—even her manner.

Idly sipping coffee, Diane said, "I suppose I should be polite and ask how everything is in Prairievale, but frankly I'm not interested."

"I'll ignore that last remark and tell you," Sally said smiling, "that Hugh and I are still in the honeymoon stage, and Linda and Kyle are to be married next June."

"June, huh?" Diane eyed Linda carefully. "Do you love him, Linda?"

Linda reddened, confused by the direct question. Diane had always been famous for her frankness. Despite her fragile appearance her tongue could be sharp, and she had once admitted, she "never minced words."

"W-w-why of course I do," Linda cried indignantly. "We've been engaged four years."

"What is Kyle doing? Does he have a good job?"

Linda dropped her eyes to her plate. "He—he isn't working just now."

"Oh?"

"It isn't his fault," Linda defended her sweetheart passionately. "It's just that he's had a streak of bad luck. Everything will be all right as soon as he's on his feet again."

Diane's voice was silkily smooth. "And Linda will be a housewife, with a little cottage and a baby or two, and the Prairievale Sewing society to occupy her spare time. Won't that be cozy?"

Linda felt her cheeks redden hotly. How dared Diane make it sound so—so cheerless!

"I think it sounds wonderful!" defiantly.

"Of course you do," Diane said smoothly. "Of course. I quite understand."

Linda felt that Diane had not entirely understood the situation, that she could not know how Linda really felt toward Kyle Norman. She was, as always, a trifle uneasy in Diane's presence. Somehow this shrewd and worldly young woman had a way of revealing the truth.

"I've arranged to meet a few of the girls to do some last minute shopping for Betty," Diane was saying. "You know—extra flowers and things. Poor Betty has so much on hand that I promised to help out. Two of the girls are her bridesmaids, and I'm sure you'll like them, Linda."

"You're sure I won't be interfering?" Linda questioned anxiously. "After all, they probably know Sally, and since I'm a stranger—"

Diane smiled, slipping an arm around the shoulder of her timorous friend. "Of course not, honey, I'm sure they'll like you very much."

"I hope so," Linda whispered fervently. "I do hope so." In a sudden burst of confidence, she cried, "I'm so unlike you, Diane, or you, Sally. I never know what to say to people!"

"Then take a tip from me, darling," Diane grinned wickedly. "Act as though you owned the world, and people will think you really do."

The confidence in her voice buoyed Linda as the three of them taxied downtown, and listening to the lilting of the others' voices she busied herself in imaginary conversation with Diane's friends—preparing herself for what Sally might consider exciting, yet which to Linda was an ordeal—the ordeal of meeting strangers.

When Linda entered the lobby of a famous midtown hotel with Sally and Diane, they were met by a bevy of smartly-clad friends—Diane's friends, and as they conversed gaily, Linda stood back, nonplussed. She suddenly was aware of her shabbiness, of the dated cut to her coat and the fact that the hat she had believed to be so smart in Prairievale resembled an old mop, compared with these tiny, feathered or befurred chapeaux.

Diane introduced her friends to Linda so rapidly that names whizzed by her ears without apparent connection with these polite strangers. She nodded and smiled confusedly, until a dark-haired, vivacious girl stopped Diane short.

"I'm afraid Diane is making it difficult for you," she said. "I'm Mary Baridon, and any friend of Mary's is a friend of yours, so come along with me and I'll see that you get acquainted with the others."

It was as easy as that. Throughout the morning and early afternoon, while the girls hastened to and fro in an orgy of shopping, Linda stayed close beside her new friend, and through her she became acquainted with the others.

She learned that Mary Baridon lived in Chicago. Her father raised thoroughbred horses and Mary rode them in society horse shows. She became acquainted with a tall blond beauty wearing a mink coat. The girl's name was Brenda Jordon, and she was, Mary explained to Linda, to be married the following month to a wealthy Chicago manufacturer. Brenda eyed Linda closely, and said in a tone that implied she was none too interested. "So you're Betty Allison's cousin. Did you go to school together?"

"Oh, no," Linda admitted readily. "I've seen Betty only a few times in my life. You see, I didn't go to college."

Linda had been quite honest, but now she could see Brenda's shoulders shrug as though she was thinking, "I'm afraid you're hardly the type of person to interest me."

"You see," Linda went on because, suddenly, she wanted these newly-made friends to understand her position, "I never had the advantages you girls have. I was raised in a small town and my father wasn't able to send me away to school. I've been a stenographer for a firm of architects for nearly three years." She stopped, embarrassed by her torrent of words.

"Don't be a doormat, darling," Diane said suddenly, because the girls were eyeing one another nervously, and the silence seemed to grow noticeable. "Girls, she's a swell kid, and, after all, money isn't everything—"

"And don't feel badly because you have to work," Mary Baridon said with spirit. "Diane works, and certainly the Baridons couldn't be any more hard up—you can ask Brenda if that isn't true, and—" she paused, to look directly at Brenda, "—and even she works."

At this remark everyone laughed uproariously, with the exception of the person referred to, and the look she flung Mary was venomous.

"I—I don't understand," Linda whispered in the girl's ear, and Mary laughed unconcernedly.

"Brenda works very hard at gold-digging, I'm afraid," she confessed. "She was practically engaged to my brother Steven who's poor but honest, when Jerry Coleman came into her life. He can't hold a candle to Steve for looks and brains, but he has millions."

Mary shrugged. "That's about all there is to it. Jerry was sunk as soon as Brenda pounced on him."

"Then she really doesn't love him? She's marrying him for his money?" Linda was shocked. "I could never do anything like that. Never!"

"Brenda's father was wealthy at one time," Mary answered, "and although he lost all his money in the crash, Brenda never got over her delusions of grandeur. I suppose that accounts for her determination to marry millions, no matter what the cost."

"You mean—she still loves your brother?"

"Who knows? Steve adored her. She was his first and only sweetheart, and we took it for granted they would marry one day. The shock of her decision to marry Jerry nearly broke Steve's heart, but Brenda emerged from the battle unscathed. Above everything else, Brenda loves Brenda best of all."

The conversation drifted around to the wedding that would take place that evening, and Linda listened enviously as Betty's wedding presents were described in glowing detail. Of the bride herself, Linda could learn nothing save that she was ecstatically happy that her husband-to-be was "simply lousy rich," as Diane expressed it flippantly, and that the couple would live in New York following their wedding cruise.

"Don't these girls ever think of anything but good looking men and having lots of money?" Linda asked the artist.

Diane shrugged. "That's the price we pay for living in this mad, mad social whirl." Her tone was heavy with sarcasm.

They were still lingering over the late luncheon when Diane exclaimed, stricken: "Good heavens! It's nearly three o'clock, and I'm having guests in for cocktails at five. Come along Linda, and you, too Sally. Girls, you're all invited. Remember I'm having men."

Someone said, "Men! Oh goody!" and there was hand-clapping and cheering, before Linda was borne away.

Bathed and refreshed, she sat cozily in Diane's bedroom, listening to the patter of conversation between the others, happily, she thought, "I wouldn't have missed being here for the world." Never had Prairievale seemed so far away. Only the pretty, softly-lighted room, the rise and fall of voices, the scents of powders and lotions around her were important. Linda seemed to be dwelling in an exciting world of make-believe from which she would never awaken.

She glanced up, suddenly, to see Diane's blond head emerging from the depths of a diaphanous slip and heard her saying:

"I'm wearing blue chiffon yet, Sally. How about you?"

Sally held forth a formal frock of turquoise-colored taffeta. "My latest acquisition," she grinned. "A going-away present from Hugh."

Linda stared at them, disbelieving. "Is—is this a formal wedding?" she whispered.

Diane's face mirrored her surprise. "Why, yes, honey. Didn't you know?"

Pride kept Linda from confessing that never in her life had she possessed a dinner gown. Instead, she said with an attempt at levity, "Just my luck not to have a single evening gown along, isn't it? I'll stay home and you two girls bring me a big slice of Betty's wedding cake."

She turned away to blink back hot tears of disappointment. How could fate have dealt her such a humiliating blow!

RICHMAN BROTHERS ANNOUNCE A CHANGE IN CLOTHING PRICES

Effective Monday, Jan. 12

Last September, when there was a general advance in clothing prices, we did not raise ours.

We made it plain at the time that it was Richman policy not to do so until it could no longer be avoided.

That has been our policy for 62 years. That is our policy today. That will be our policy always.

Since 1939, however, everything that goes into clothes has steadily gone up. And, if we are to maintain our standards of quality and value, we must adjust our prices in accordance with our increased costs.

Beginning on Monday, January 12th, therefore, Richman Brothers Standard Quality Clothes will be $24.50. Our Super Quality Line will be $29.50.

This is a $2 advance . . . a reasonable adjustment, under existing conditions . . . and in line with our 62-year policy of making fine clothes, and selling them for the lowest possible prices.

Purchases from today to Monday, January 12, limited to two garments to any individual.

SCOUTS TO AID BOOK CAMPAIGN

Girl and Boy Organizations To Help Collections For Men In Service Camps.

The Victory book campaign to be launched here Monday under the direction of the Mansfield Public library as part of a nationwide effort to provide books for men in service will be spurred by both Mansfield Girl Scout and Boy Scout organizations.

Plans will be set up Monday night by Girl Scout leaders for the city-wide distribution of leaflets reminding residents to tie their donations in bundles and set them on their porches in time for collection Saturday, Jan. 17.

Boy Scouts working in units of 12 to 20 will cover the city Jan 17, to pick up books and take them to collection centers in the various troop meeting rooms. From there they will be transported by truck to the library where they will be repaired and prepared for shipment

Scout Executives Eleanor Bond and Floyd Dent are now working on plans for the Scouts' part in the drive which will furnish men in army camps, naval bases and other service centers throughout this country and at out-lying posts with reading material.

Connecticut has used permanent auto license plates since 1937.

31 LEAVE MANSFIELD FOR NAVY STATIONS; SEVEN MORE ENLIST

Occupying all but two seats of a special bus, 31 U. S. navy recruits left Mansfield yesterday for Cleveland to be sworn into the service at Cleveland before being sent on to training stations.

Accompanied by several parents, the 29 men for whom transportation and papers had been arranged, assembled at the Mansfield postoffice shortly before bus time, only to be joined by two new recruits at the last minute.

Peter Kemle, Shelby recruit, whose release from his draft board had not been obtained, was also allowed to go to Cleveland without further delay when his draft board telephoned the recruiting station that he would be released for naval duty, a few minutes before the bus left.

At the bus station there was little time for more than a quiet farewell from parents and friends before the bus left. Recruiting Officer W. G. Cox described the men as "a pretty quiet bunch, but they were all rarin' to go."

Experiencing a better than average day at the recruiting office yesterday in spite of the cold weather, Recruiters Charles Scholtz and George Bock reported that the following seven men were accepted:

Herbert A. Beyer, Shelby, James F Lambright, Crestline R D 2; Robert E Ernst Ashland; Edward McNew, 124 West Second street; Donald Yeager, Lexington R D 2; Lowell E. Rinehart, Mt. Gilead R D 2, and Oscar M Kirchbaum, Crestline R. D. 2.

MEETS MONDAY

Madison School Board To Organize For Year.

Members of the Madison township board of education will hold an organization meeting Monday at 8 p m. in Madison high school, Olan LaRue, superintendent, said today.

Purpose of the meeting, LaRue, said, is to choose new officers and acquaint Harold Tingley and Herschel Roberts, new board members, with board operations.

There are five members of the board. Re-elected member is Lawrence Hughes. Phillip Kipp and William Reindehl are members whose terms carried them through the last election.

LaRue also announced today that examination periods at Madison high school will be changed this year so that the tests are given over a two-day period.
